ROBERTS, Isaac, Sc.D., F.R.S. 1890; F.R.A.S. 1882; F.G.S. 1870. Dr. Roberts's original investigations in the domain of Astronomy added largely to our knowledge of the stars, clusters, nebulæ, and the structure of the universe. He also made a study of Geology, and up to 1890 pursued his scientific investigations at Liverpool; on leaving that city he was presented with an illuminated address, signed by the Mayor, the Principals and Professors of the University College, the representatives and members of the scientific and literary societies, and the leading citizens of Liverpool. The hon. degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin, 1892. In 1895 he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society, on the Council of which he served for several years. After 1890 his work was continued at his observatory at Starfield. He contributed to the Royal Astronomical Society and to Knowledge between the years 1886 and 1903 upwards of 150 photographs taken with his 20-inch reflector, each of which showed structural and other details of objects in the sky that were previously unknown to astronomers.
